Didgeridoo workshops

Did you know in Ipswich you can make your own Didgeridoo and learn how to play one?

Didgeridoo Festivals holds a jam session on the first Saturday of the month outside on their bush stage. They are a didgeridoo community with a unique gathering of instruments surrounded by gum trees and wildlife. They also hold bush camps for men and boys with renowned artists. The next one is coming up on October 25 with Mark Atkins and Nathan Kaye on stage.

About the artists: Acknowledged as one of Australia's finest Didgeridoo players, Mark Atkins is also recognised internationally for his collaborative projects with some of the world's leading composers and musicians. A descendant of Western Australia's Yamitji people, as well as of Irish/Australian heritage, Mark Atkins is known not only for his masterly playing, but also as a storyteller, composer, percussionist, visual artist and instrument maker. Nathan Kaye is an influential part of the Australian roots music scene and renowned as the world's first didgeridoo-beat boxer, Nathan Kaye, is a globe-trotting one-man-band who thumps out songs on slide guitar, slide-didge and electric foot-drums. It's music that marries the earthy drive of John Butler, Xavier Rudd and Ben Harper with the uplifting atmosphere of Michael Franti and Nahko Medicine For the People. It's the best sweaty, dirty, good-vibed foot-stomp you'll get from a one-man show. And his band show takes it next level! Marlon Riley - Birrmba is an accomplished storyteller, song-man and dancer. During the weekend he will share his knowledge and stories about local history and meanings in cultural workshops.
